

The Department of Social and Political Sciences invites you to a lecture on

Various Faces of Party-based Euroscepticism

Who is Eurosceptic? Is it just a political label? Are there any differences between Tsipras and Le Pen? The lecture focuses on the various forms and types of party-based Euroscepticism. It differentiates hard and soft Euroscepticism based on the categorisation of Taggart and Szczerbiak (2000), however, it also distinguishes three forms of soft Euroscepticism, namely the anti-federalist, the alternative integrationist and the conformist ones. It classifies the reasons of the phenomenon, too, by defining sovereignty-based Euroscepticism, democracy-based Euroscepticism, left-wing/anti-capitalist Euroscepticism, periphery-based Euroscepticism, and redistribution-based Euroscepticism.
