Architectural Practice in the Age of Volatility

We operate in a world of an exponentially accelerating speed of distribution of information; where technology is constantly reasserting our physical reality. It is also a world of climatic crisis, continuous disruption and ever increasing volatility. In this emerging age of postmodern reality one quickly poses the question on how a bounded by locality architectural practice can remain relevant in its discourse, transcending local bounds and nomenclatures. How can a practice maintain rigour in its discourse and purpose in an agenda of architectural production for the new millennium?

Michael Cosmas holds a Master's degree in Architecture and Urban Design from Harvard University, and an Architecture Diploma from the Architectural Association (AA) London. After completing his studies, he worked for offices with significant contributions to modern Architecture such as Foreign Office Architects (FOA) and the Office for Metropolitan Architecture (OMA). In 2001 Michael founded MCA (Michael Cosmas Architecture LLC) The practice has a wide portfolio of projects, which include residential, commercial and educational buildings, as well as urban design studies (masterplans). MCA's work has received recognition in architectural competitions and has been published in the local and international architectural press. Michael maintains an active participation in the discussion of Architecture and Urbanism in Cyprus. He has served as a member of the board of the CAA, a member of ETEK and MEDSK committees, and has recently been appointed to the position of vice-president of the Town Planning Council.
