"I hear the ruin of all space, shattered glass and toppling masonry, and time one livid final flame. What's left then?"

James Joyce, Ulysses

I. Course Description

This course continues the survey of prose fiction in English by focusing on a) the emergence, during the course of the twentieth century, of the aesthetics and politics of literary modernism and postmodernism; b) the concrete dimensions of modernist and postmodernist literary aesthetics; c) the decentralization of the very notion of "English" literature through the increasing visibility of literary voices from the "margins" of traditional English studies. In the course of the semester, we will address both contexts and texts; on the one hand, we will sketch out some of the major debates concerning the historical specificity and complexity of twentieth-century social and cultural realities. On the other hand, we will examine fiction's development of new formal and stylistic techniques (stream of consciousness, fracture of narrative continuity, proliferation of diverse points of view, textual as opposed to author-centered aesthetics, intertextuality and meta-textuality) in its effort to formulate responses to the impact of modern and postmodern experience.

II. Learning Outcomes

Students are expected to be able to demonstrate their familiarity with the texts they have studied and to develop the ability to engage critically not only with primary texts but also with the secondary material they have been introduced to during the semester. Further, students are expected to be able to demonstrate their ability to analyse the texts they have studied within the broader social, cultural, and political framework within which they were produced.

III. Course Grading and Evaluation

Students will be evaluated on the basis of a mid-term examination (30%), one reading response assignment (20%), and a final examination (50%). Topics for the reading response assignments will be handed out in advance at various stages in the course and will be due two weeks after you have received the topics. For the mid-term exam you will have to answer a number of questions based on lecture and reading material and answer short essay questions on the texts studied in the first half of the course. The final examination will involve writing a long essay on a comparative topic that concerns an aspect of the texts studied. Questions will involve different combinations of all primary texts discussed in the course.

IV. Class Policies

Though introductory sessions will rely heavily on lecture, discussions of the individual novels require that you keep pace with each session's reading assignments. Failure to do so will negatively affect your grade and of course detract you from performing well in the course. Class attendance is required according to university policy. If you miss more than three class sessions, you may be advised to withdraw or be told to expect a failing grade in the course. All work for the course must be handed in within the deadlines provided. Do not assume that papers or exams handed in late will be accepted. Plagiarism will not be tolerated: you will receive a zero for the plagiarized assignment and be referred to the departmental board for further discussion of your case.
