PSY 216 PSYCHOACOUSTICS AND COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE OF THE AUDITORY SYSTEM

The perception of sound is one of our most basic senses. It is involved in innumerable cognitive functions, such as memory, learning, perception and processing of language and music. Psychoacoustics is the field of psychophysics that deals with the perception and processing of sound. During the semester we will first talk about the physical properties of sound and the anatomy and physiology of hearing. We will then focus on the higher cognitive functions associated with sound processing. Finally, we will refer to the disorders of the auditory system and their effects on the functionality of higher cognitive processes associated with sound processing.
