“Multilingualism and lifelong language learning”

“The inherent multilingualism of Cyprus”

SPYROS ARMOSTIS– President of the Cyprus Linguistics Society

Spyros Armostis is a Lecturer in Linguistics at the Department of English Studies, University of Cyprus. He holds a PhD and an MPhil in Linguistics (Phonetics) from the University of Cambridge and a BA in Classics from the University of Cyprus.

His publications in international journals and edited volumes lie mainly in the fields of phonetics, phonology, sociolinguistics, and clinical linguistics. His research activities (conference presentations and proceedings, participation in research programmes, BA and MA thesis supervision) have also expanded to other areas, such as grapholinguistics, language documentation and revitalisation, and second language acquisition. Focal points of his work have been the study of Cypriot Greek and Cypriot Arabic, but he has also worked on Standard Modern Greek, Pontic Greek, English, and French.

He is currently the president of the Cyprus Linguistics Society (CyLing) and an appointed member of the Cyprus Permanent Committee for the Standardisation of Geographical Names (MKETFO). Finally, he is the Coordinator of the “Cy[Φ]” (pronounced [ˈsaɪ̯ ˈfaɪ̯]) Phonetics Lab, Department of English Studies, University of Cyprus.
